SERVICE vs. TAXES:

Annexation talk revived; property owners hesitate

BY BILL BECHTOLD

The City of Carmel encompasses less than one square mile in area and a population of less than 5000 people. By most "city standards" it is small. In this respect, it has not changed very much in the past 15 years.

But when most Carmelites talk about Carmel, they do not stop at the city limits. Few residents, in fact, are aware of the exact boundaries that separate Carmel from its adjacent areas. Nevertheless, the truth is that much of "Carmel" is not Carmel.

Carmel Woods, Handley Hills, Hatton Fields, Carmel Hills, Mission Fields and Carmel Point are all part of the "Carmel area." Yet they are County-controlled and serviced, existing outside the city limits of Carmel and its jurisdiction.

Why?

Certainly, the smallness of the boundaries of Carmel is not due to any lack of encouragement on behalf of the City Council or Carmel administrators to enlarge them. The last 15 years have seen repeated attempts to annex contiguous territory to the City and repeated failures to succeed. The record has been one of tiny gains and major losses.

Twice, once in 1958 and again in 1964, movements got under way to annex the Carmel Point area. They were abandoned when it became apparent that there was much local opposition to the annexation. The same is true of an attempt to add the "Walker Tract"(east of Rio Road and south of 12th Street) to the City in 1954.

More recently successful annexations have extended the city limits by bits and pieces. These have included mostly one or two-home areas, and the largest was the addition of the "Mission Tract", which took in some 12 or 15 homes. Clearly, at this rate the City of Carmel gains little except an erratic border.

According to City Clerk Hugh Bayless, the city is "favorably disposed" to the initiation of annexation procedures for any territory adjoining the present City limits. The City Council, from its position in past proceedings, has practically given "carte blanche" to any adjoining area that would like to become part of Carmel proper.

The initiative, however, must come from the homeowners themselves. Any legal annexation of an inhabited area cannot proceed without the support of at least one-fourth of the registered voters of the area to be annexed.

Under the State Annexation Act of 1913, there is a minimum of 38 steps which must be completed before annexation is final. A simplified version follows:

1.) A resident or group of residents of the proposed annexation area asks the City Council to commence proceedings.

2.) The City Council then refers the request to the Planning Commission for their recommendation, resolves the beginning of proceedings and then files notice of the intention to annex with Local Agency Formation Commission for their approval of legitimacy and boundaries.

3.) Next a petition must be introduced and publicized and the signatures of at least 25 percent of the registered voters in the proposed area must be collected.

4.) After the signatures have been validated, the City Council must call for a hearing of protests and call for a special election.

5.) If a protest is filed with more than 50 percent of the owners (or owners of more than 50 percent of the value of the territory), the proceedings terminate and cannot be reopened for at least one year.

6.) If there is no majority protest, the City Council shall call for a special election and give public notice accordingly.

7.) If more than 50 percent only 8,000 square feet.)

"Mobil doesn't want to come in with a great big gas station," Lloyd declared. "We want to build a station worthy of Carmel."

A humorous note was struck when President Cost tried to assess how the members felt on the issue. He asked for a show of hands on how many felt the new gas station should be allowed: a few hands rose. Only a scattered number of hands appeared when asked whether they felt the old gas station should stay where it is now. Virtually every hand in the room was raised in enthusiastic affirmation to the question, "How many of you don't want any gas stations at all in Carmel?"

The knotty problem of parking in the business district was discussed at some length. Cost revealed that a committee has been working on the problem intensively for several months, and has come up with a "workable plan" to alleviate the lack of parking spaces.

One of the biggest contributing factors to lack of space is the estimated 1,000 cars brought in by businessmen and their employees each day, many of which are parked in front of their place of business.

Cost told the gathering that a survey revealed that the lack of available parking during the prime business hours of 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. was costing $9.5 million in lost business to downtown merchants.

The comparative property tax rates for Peninsula area cities shows that Carmel has the lowest rate among its neighbors, both in city tax and in the total property tax for $100 assessed valuation. The breakdown is:

City	City tax per $100 assessed valuation	Total prop. tax
Carmel	$1.310	$8.231
Pacific Grove	1.740	10.113
Monterey	1.967	10.219
Seaside	1.550	9.925

For unincorporated areas the figures are slightly lower, since there is no special city tax. However, the County charges 18.2 cents per $100 for rendering vital services in those areas. The rates vary with location, but for Carmel Woods, for example, the total rate is $7.106 and for Carmel Point, $7.119.

'Cage-rattlers' at CBA dinner

The "largest collection of 'cage-rattlers' and 'giant-killers' ever assembled under one roof" grappled with some of Carmel's more persistent problems at the dinner meeting last Thursday of the Carmel Business Association.

City officials were on hand to answer questions from the crowd of more than 200 business men and women at the "Town Meeting" chaired by CBA president James P. Cost.

A good deal of time was taken with discussion of the proposed Mobil station on the corner of Junipero and Fifth. The City last week turned down the application for a new station at the site because the request called for a station to occupy 10,000 square feet. City law prohibits gas stations exceeding 8,000 square feet.

Francis P. "Skip" Lloyd, attorney for the parties interested in the new gas station location, pointed out that his clients were not attempting to add another gas station to Carmel, but were relocating the existing outmoded facility on the corner of San Carlos and 7th.

(At its regular meeting last night, the City Planning Commission set a date for a public hearing for the new gas station on a new application submitted by Mr. Lloyd for a service station of of the residents in the proposed territory vote in favor of annexation, the City Council shall pass an ordinance approving the annexation. When copies of the vote result and City ordinance are sent to the State, the annexation is complete.

The actual proceedings are much more complex, but these seven steps are the basic necessities for legal annexation. It can easily be seen that the most tenacious effort on both the part of the City and the "annexees" is required for the successful completion of the procedure.

TAXES AND SERVICES

The City of Carmel received last year approximately $322,000 in property taxes from its residents. This is quite a bit of money for a community of some 4,700 population and comes to $75 in property taxes per capita. However, the Carmel tax rate is lower than the rates of any of the other peninsula cities, even though the total city income per resident is higher than any of the other communities.

The difference is explained by the amount of property valuation, which in Carmel averages much higher than in other incorporated areas. However, in some of the unincorporated areas, such as Carmel Point, the assessed valuation averages even higher than in Carmel.

But the unincorporated rate is lower. Instead of Carmel's $1.31 per $100 assessed valuation, the areas surrounding Carmel pay an 18.2 cent service tax per $100 assessed valuation to the County for police, fire and streets. If these areas decide to join the City of Carmel, it will cost them a raise of $1.13 in their tax rate.

Using the statistics of the Carmel Sanitary District, which roughly includes the Carmel" area", the total assessed valuation of property is approximately $50 million. The total assessed valuation of property in the City of Carmel is about $25 million. Thus, the inclusion of the Carmel area currently outside of the city limits would double the city's revenue from property taxes. This is a tempting carrot for any modern city, and Carmel is no exception.

But what about the taxpayer who is called upon to contribute to this added revenue for the city? How does he look at the situation?

Consider the position of a resident who owns a home on Carmel Point and who is faced with a decision of whether or not to become part of the City of Carmel. Suppose he owns a $40,000 home, on which the assessed valuation is $10,000. He is already paying a property tax of $7.199 per $100 assessed valuation, which brings his yearly property tax to a total of $719.90. If his property comes within the city limits, his tax will be raised to $8.231 per $100 and total $823.10. The differential is $103.20. What will he get for this extra expense?

The proponents of annexation offer four specific advantages of residing within the city limits:

1.) Local police protection
2.) Local fire protection
3.) Local street maintainance
4.) Local government administration

The question that presents itself is one of cost. Are these services worth the added $103 to his yearly property tax?

Opinions on this vary. In the past the general feeling among potential areas of annexation was that the County was providing adequate police and fire protection and that the County maintainance of streets and highways was good.

But to many proponents of annexation the major issue concerns the responsiveness of the County Board of Supervisors versus the Carmel City Council. There have been cases in which the County Administrators, meeting in Salinas, simply have had too many matters under their jurisdiction to give the in-depth consideration to a Carmel area issue.

Carmel's elected officials are in a better position to cope with local needs.

A case in point is the recent and still undecided issue of rezoning in Hatton Fields. Local residents, by an overwhelming majority, have protested the approval of rezoning for a developer who wants to build double the number of houses on his property that the current zoning allows. The County Planning Commission granted the developer a variance to the present zoning restrictions, while the residents in the area became frustrated in their efforts to stem this divergence from local standards.

In addition, they incurred expense and spent much time organizing a protest and traveling to Salinas to register their complaints. The final outcome of their efforts will not be known until late July when the County Board of Supervisors meets to resolve the issue.

Had Hatton Fields been under the jurisdiction of the City of Carmel, it is doubtful that such a situation would have occurred. In the first place, all of the members of the City Council and Planning Commission are Carmel residents and readily available to members of the community. They are in closer touch to the Carmel area and its citizens than the County Board of Supervisirs could ever be. Action on such an issue as zoning variances can be decided swiftly and intelligently, without the considerations of a supervisor from Greenfield, for example, who may have to worry about the conflicting interests of his constituents.

The decision of whether or not more responsive representation is worth the added property tax is an individual one.

Although many people feel that their current County police and fire protection is adequate, there still remains the question of local control. The Carmel Police cannot now answer calls outside of the City limits, and when they receive requests from area residents not in Carmel, they must call the County Sheriff's office. How soon the County Police arrive on the scene depends on how busy they are; but in general, the Carmel Police are in a better position to respond to local calls.

A few years ago, Carmel Police Chief Clyde Klaumann estimated that with an additional car and two additional men, Carmel could give the same amount of police protection to the residents of Carmel Point as they now give to City dwellers.

Fire Chief Robert Updike stated that the current Carmel Fire Department could easily "handle all the area this side of Highway 1 from Pebble Beach to the Carmel River without any problems."

In addition, Matthew Little, Carmel insurance agent, estimated that by coming within the city limits of Carmel, a homeowner could count on approximately a 10 percent reduction in his fire insurance rates.

For our Carmel Point resident this could mean a savings of $28 per year, since most residents outside of the city limits pay about $77 per $10,000 in fire insurance, and the rate inside Carmel is $70 per $10,000. Subtracting this savings from the additional property tax expense, the remainder comes to $75 per year in order to become part of the City of Carmel.

Again, the potential "annexee" must make the decision. The City of Carmel cannot initiate any action for annexation. Because the Carmel Sanitary District serves the entire Carmel area and because the Carmel Unified School District does the same, the Carmel area is already "unified" in many ways. Some organizations, such as the Carmel Citizens' Committee are advocating further unification.

Admiral C.W. Fisher, president of the Committee, stated that the position of the Committee has been and still is that: "the Carmel area, bounded by Carmel Hill on the north, the Pacific Ocean on the west, the floor of the Carmel Valley on the east and the Carmel River or Meadows area on the south, is a geographical unit. Eventually, it must act as a unit and be governed accordingly for its own protection and convenience."

Admiral Fisher also commented that when proposals were originally initiated for annexation of Carmel Point in 1959 and of the Walker Tract (north of Rio Road) in 1954, there was "much misinformation concerning the procedure of annexation. Many homeowners in those areas were afraid that the city could, at will, 'gobble' them up. At present, the area has grown to such an extent that 'Carmel-unincorporated' outnumbers the population of the City, and it will be interesting in the future to see exactly who gobbles up whom."

What finally emerges as they key issue in the question of annexation is money. The Carmel area taxpayers outside of the City limits consider themselves already overburdened with property taxes. If the City of Carmel could come forward with a plan which would reduce the property tax of those who live in potential annexation areas, the City would have little trouble recruiting new residents.

Can our schools provide valid, meaningful education?

McCurry resigns as principal of River School to try new concepts

By JUDITH A. EISNER

Are we providing a valid, meaningful education for our children in the public schools today?

Edwin L. McCurry has resigned as principal of Carmel's River School because he feels we cannot make education meaningful under our present system.

McCurry, a soft-voiced yet outspoken man who is keenly aware of what the media calls "the crisis in our schools," is apparently doing everything illogical and foolhardy a credentialled teacher can do short of conducting a sit-in in the principal's office. His resignation, effective July 1, symbolizes a willing and willful renunciation of a position that combines power, prestige and financial security as well as the logical, ordered promotion gained through 19 years as teacher and administrator.

It is this 19-years of accumulated day-to-day experience in the elementary schools, 12 of them on the Monterey Peninsula, that have forced McCurry to his decision. When one is married and has three children and a long, successful record as an educator, one doesn't simply quit in a fit of pique. One must weigh carefully the obvious advantages of sticking with the system—the salary, the tenure-created security, the eventual retirement benefits—and balance these against the depth of one's idealism, one's philosophies of education and of life.

At 44, Ed McCurry and his wife Marilyn have been doing just that. And their decision, made jointly, has culminated in Ed's pending resignation and the imminent opening of Sun Spring Experimental Learning Center on an 80-acre site in the backwoods of Palo Colorado Canyon.

"To get an idea of the quality of education today, ask anyone how many great teacher's he's had," says McCurry, who believes the two or three teachers a person may recall indicate a grave shortcoming in the system.

"I want to start a school in which rapid curriculum change is the rule, not the exception," explains McCurry. "Our school will be non-authoritarian; students will be responsible for their own learning. We will relieve students of the damaging pressure of grade levels and grading, and of boredom in the learning process. We will create the most exciting learning situations we can dream of. Students will become involved directly with real-life situations and people in the community rather than just learning theory. We will individualize teaching and learning through very small class size, through consideration of student interests, and with students teaching one another."

The things McCurry hopes to achieve at Sun Spring are the very things he finds lacking in public education, and he states the three main considerations of his new school will be to gain an understanding of Nature, Man and oneself as an individual.

"Our goal will be to create independent learners. We're essentially creating dependent learners in the public schools—students who are accustomed to having teachers show them every step of the way. We teach theory rather than actuality; we teach kids about things. We tell them about things without letting them discover the real nature of something; we describe too much without letting the subject speak for itself."

McCurry is quick to make one point: "I've had more freedom in Carmel to do things I felt were good than I've had anywhere else," and he is sincere in his praises of the School District and of the Board. The problem for Ed McCurry is that the relatively large amount of freedom he's had isn't enough, and change doesn't come fast enough.

"One of the factors influencing my decision is my strong concern with environmental problems and my tendency to agree with the environmentalists who contend that we may have 15 years left at our present pace..." The public schools cannot hope to adopt meaningful, constructive policies of environmental awareness on a large scale in that short time.

Besides, McCurry feels that one of the basic ills of mass education is its inherent inability to treat students as individuals. All of the curriculum change and modern teaching innovations cannot rectify the problem created by sheer volume of students and the high student-to-teacher ratio.

"As long as we maintain a class size of 25 or 30, I don't care how you organize—you're not going to reach them as individuals." He feels 12 is the maximum acceptable class size. "No more than 12 students in a class enables you to be in touch on an emotional and intellectual level and you have to be in touch to really reach them. I think the main human illness is that we have lost touch with one another. People need to be in touch with people," he says with conviction, and he is not referring to physical isolation but to spiritual communication, to people interacting with others with genuine interest, concern and understanding.

Although the Carmel Unified School District is regarded as one of the finest, most progressive in the state, McCurry feels that it is still hung up by the prevailing public education philosophies; as long as a school system is dependent on state monies, it must conform to certain rules, and these rules are invalid for students today.

"We stress material needs in our schools and ignore the need for a human being to attain happiness. We buy more and more electronic gadgets and materials...and this cannot compensate for the lack of personal contact in our schools. Given the free choice of how to spend all that money given us to buy gadgets and materials, I'd rather buy human beings."

As principal, Ed has seen other problems about which he was able to do little.

"We must begin to de-emphasize materialism as a way of life," he says, but the schools, supported as they are by tax dollars, are forced to conform to existing national consumer policies. "We must learn how little we can get by with and how much we can do without and still be happy and healthy. To be successful in society as taught in the public schools, a person must first succeed in school and then must graduate to do something in line with boosting the Gross National Product. We must perpetually increase the GNP—if we don't we've failed, when in fact if we continue to do it we'll be wiping ourselves out.

"At Sun Spring we hope to have the kids find meaning through natural means, not artificial means. We'll try to get them to examine key issues and world philosophies without directing them toward one end or another. Just being able to get kids into a natural environment is a step to their understanding Nature and their part in it."

McCurry plans to depart from the artificial, textbook-oriented type of education, although textbooks will be used at Sun Spring as a teaching aid rather than as the structure of the learning process. He insists on a free learning atmosphere, untainted even by such much-lauded public education principles as "ungraded" classes.

"The evil of graded curricula, complete with textbook and grades to signify accomplishment, is that we automatically expect students to go a certain distance in a limited amount of time; this we consider success. Parents, who are success-oriented, start applying pressures at an early age that the child achieve success conforming to the parental values."

Even at an "ungraded" school, the pressures still exist and children are expected to master certain basics—the three R's—within reasonable limits of time. Additional pressures are caused by the teachers themselves.

"Most typical classroom situations are those in which the teacher dominates; the teacher is the giver of knowledge. Classrooms become authoritarian and there are few teachers who are secure enough to give children real freedom.

"At Sun Springs, the teacher and student will become fellow learners, seeking answers together and they will try to go directly to the source of knowledge."

The current tenure system in California is now under heavy attack and McCurry foresees an end to this system. As he explains it, a young, enthusiastic, talented teacher is granted tenure. Years later, tired out, running out of inspirational steam, he must be retained by virtue of his "tenure," even though he may be a hindrance to innovation in the school, and his teaching methods may be a deathblow to creative classroom experience.

"I was faced with a question," says McCurry. "Am I, as an administrator, willing to coerce teachers into functioning in accordance with my views...and I've come to the conclusion that their values are as valid to them as mine are to me...I'm not willing to do this coercing any more. In private schools, you seek out individuals who agree with your philosophies; you don't have to contend with tenured teachers...

"In the public schools we waste so much time fighting over things that can't be solved. I want to put all my energies into positive motion rather than into coercive action."

He feels, too, that the entire structure of required coursework is not able to take into consideration the actual needs of the students. Schools are required to use certain textbooks for a variety of invalid reasons, ranging from the fact that the books are on hand to the political pressures of giving various textbook houses some business. "If a child knows what's in a text," says McCurry, "he doesn't need the textbook." Making him use it, he infers, is a creative crime.

"At Sun Spring School, we will not be confined to accepted texts. We'll use whatever we want, whatever is valid and interesting. We'll use the public library! If we get a room at Sunset Center for use as a classroom, we'll take the kids to Harrison Library."

He cites the case of Physical Education at Carmel High School as an example of required coursework being ineffectual. As a required subject, every student must attend and pass P.E., with no consideration given to whether the student is actually in need of or profiting from the class. Additional problems occur when there is room for only four students on a badminton court and the other 16 students are required to sit and wait...

Students who are good over-all athletes—who hike and camp and surf—are still required to participate, and this demonstrates the inflexibility of the public school program. McCurry's sympathies lie with the student who walks out of such a class and calls it a waste of time. It is—but the educational system won't admit it.

"We're interested in doing at Sun Spring, in making our students participants rather than watchers," adds McCurry. We are producing a nation of spectators and the schools foster this. "It has always seemed ridiculous to go into a football stadium, for example, and see thousands of people badly in need of exercise watching a handful of people who don't need exercise stage an exhibition.

"I'm especially interested in high school kids who are on the verge of dropping out...for valid reasons...and those reasons all add up to boredom. Children are asked to put in time in school without any real reason for doing so.

"At our school, we'll let them take part in different activities...in building, gardening, intensive creative writing classes...in the hopes that they'll find meaning. And we'll comingle philosophy with building...it's entirely plausible, just as a teacher in the high school is mixing poetry and literature with pottery."

Another reform he'd like to see is the free use of educational dollars. "Each child should be given the tax money spent by the state for his education and his parents should be permitted to use it as they see fit—for education, of course. Let the students and parents choose. The competition within the schools, if tax money followed the kids, would be a wonderful things. Schools would be competing for students rather than accepting their zoned quota."

All the things he has fought for and striven against in the public schools he hopes will become realities at his school. Ungraded—the students will not only be together regardless of age, but will be treated as individuals, which, according to McCurry, should be the meaning of "ungraded." Small class size and a total enrollment of not more than 100 students (River School has more than 500 and is considered, on a state-wide scale, a small school). Exposure to natural beauty so that the children can compare for themselves the untouched wilderness and the densely populated, heavily used areaa. A stress on the arts. An open-minded approach even to such basics as the 3 R's. A practicing democracy—where every key issue is open to debate and all opinions are valued.

'Freedom, not license,' as phrased by A.S. Neill. "You can do your thing if it doesn't hurt anyone else or keep them from learning. Your rights stop where another guy's start," paraphrases McCurry. No drugs, and an attitude that will encourage children to solve their problems without resorting to the escapism offered by drugs...

An appreciation and awareness of man's need for communication...McCurry is offering weekend campouts during the summer so that the children's parents can have a few days off to find each other again! Dedicated, progressive teachers, a willingness to use any and every available material at hand. All this is what Sun Spring will offer.

At the hands of a man less qualified and less dedicated, this might be but a Utopian dream. But McCurry's feet are as much on the ground as his eyes are on the stars.

"To reach a handful and reach them well," say Edwin MCurry, "is all on man can hope to do."

William True weds

William Ray True, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. True of Carmel, was married June 6 to Joan Frances Hardy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Hardy of Tracy, Calif. The wedding took place at the Queen of the Snows Mission in Squaw Valley.

The groom is a graduate of Carmel High School and the University of California, where he earned a bachelor's degree in history. He served as a Lieutenant j.g. in the Naval Reserve and for two years in the Peace Corps in Peru.

The bride received her B.A. from the University of Santa Clara and an M.A. in education from Stanford University.

Matron of honor for the wedding ceremony was the bride's sister, Mrs. David Fahey of Sunnyvale. Best man was the bridegroom's brother, Gregory True of Carmel. The ushers included John Durein of Carmel and Sunnyvale and the bride's brother, Thomas Hardy of San Diego.

After the reception at the Cal-Nevada Lodge in Lake Tahoe, the couple drove to Bloomington, Indiana, where the groom will begin graduate work next fall. During the summer, the couple plans to tour Europe.

the mayor's report

By BARNEY LAIOLO

Much concern is being presented regarding the Hatton Canyon Scenic Highway. True, there are many pros and cons but we must remember that necessity is the mother of invention and if we face the facts we can't stop to any degree the population influx, present and future. We must sacrifice some of our joys and hopes to confront the problem.

It is quite apparent that the state and the highway planners had this in mind when they secured the necessary right of way and easements. I personally would prefer a gracious scenic road to move the people to and from in an easier manner than to have on my conscience the accidents and deaths that could occur. Few people can adjust to change but we are living in a changing world so the sooner we try to adapt ourselves, the better conditions might be.

For the music lovers who attend performances at Sunset, there is something new in store. In progress right now is the construction of an inner shell for the better projection of music. This plan, being built and installed under Mr. Brace's direction, seems quite logical and I am certain will add to the enjoyment of presentations there. Good luck on your venture.

Commissioner Anderson and Bill Askew have come up with some new signs in the downtown area to help people identify our streets. Due to the non-conformities of our sidewalks, etc., this has been quite a challenge and I feel this is a good answer to the problem. What's your reaction?

The Town Hall meeting last Thursday presented by the Carmel Business Association proved to be a success. While a good portion of the meeting dealt with the proposed gas station at 6th and Junipero, it did result in many good and sound ideas being presented. The CBA is to be congratulated for the work being done and the increase and interest with the business people of Carmel.

Had a talk with Ham Wilson a few days ago. He tells me there is a new plan being developed for the use of the Boy Scout House at 8th and Mission for youth purposes. This is for older youth and not to be related to the present Youth Center. More on this when it is finalized.

I'm writing this week's letter to you on Father's Day. It has been a most pleasant day—enjoying my sons, Linder and Chris and some of their friends. Tony could not be with us as he is working at college. It's days like these that make one realize the generation gap isn't as far apart as some might like to make you believe. A little kindness and a "big ear" can do wonders.

Petpourri

BY JUDITH EISNER

As vacation time approaches for many families, so does the question of what to do with the family pet. There are several alternatives for animal-owning families and they are, to some degree, dependent on the number and type of pets you own.

For many families, vacation plans automatically include the family dog. In most cases, taking him along is the best, happiest solution; true family dogs cause less trouble on a vacation than a well-behaved child.

However, your decision to take along the dog will depend on the type of vacation you're planning. A motor trip or a week or two at a dog-accepting resort, or a camping trip is fine for the dog, even as a whirlwind airplane "city-hopping" tour of Europe is not. We'll write at a later date about taking your pet with you.

But let's assume that you have more than one pet; perhaps your family harbors two dogs and two cats and these present far more of a burden than you feel your vacation can safely stand. Arrangements must be made for the animals' care during your absence.

Generally speaking, it is best not to board a pet dog or cat. Under the best conditions, with the kindest attention, the average pet, when handed over to a boarding kennel attendant, feels that he is being abandoned and that he will never see you again. His stay at the kennel and, indeed, his attitude for days or weeks after you reclaim him, may be nervous, anxious and depressed. He may be afraid every time you take him for a car ride, or every time you leave him home alone. His appetite may be off, and he may have lost weight during his confinement.

Cats, who may appear less concerned, also suffer considerably when boarded. They are forced to endure close contact with other strange cats; their routines are upset, and cats are even greater creatures of habit than dogs. They, too, may refuse to eat, especially as they tend to be choosier about their food than dogs, and may end up looking rather scrawny and miserable upon your return.

If certain conditions can be met, the best solution to the cat problem is the hiring of a dependable "cat-sitter" who will care for your pets. The catch-word there is "dependable." If you are going to be 500 or more miles away, you must be absolutely certain your pets are being kindly and properly cared for.

Usually, a sincere, mature and animal-loving neighborhood girl—preferrably of high school age—can be retained to visit your home at least once a day. There, she will feed, water and reassure your cats, as well as change their litter box. She must be capable of keeping the cats inside as she slips in and out of the house or you may come home to find a cat has taken off for parts unknown.

You can explain your cats' diet to this angel, and should then write it down and tack it in some conspicuous spot. You should stock up on more than enough catfood to last through your absence, and be sure to leave the name of your veterinarian with instructions to call him is anything seems amiss. And you can drive off, on vacation day, assured that your cats will receive good care, in familiar surroundings, while you are away.

We feel that under no circumstances should dogs be left alone at home for more than one day. It is not enough to engage a "dog-sitter" and leave your pet out in the yard, perhaps chained to a doghouse, while you are gone.

Dogs cannot be confined indoors all day, primarily because dogs are trained to relieve themselves outdoors and the housebroken dog who is forced to make a mistake inside is very miserable. Out of boredom, unhappiness or spite, dogs can destroy a considerable amount of household goods when left against their wishes. And they can not only dig under, climb over or tear through fences, but have occasionally gone through window panes as well.

If you cannot take the dog along, board him. But take certain precautions about the place to which you are relegating your pet for a week or two. First choice is a friend who loves dogs and has a fenced yard. If he can care for your dog, this is an excellent solution. Second choice for a temporary home is your veterinarian's kennel, if he has boarding facilities. He knows you and, more important, knows your dog. If something comes up, he can act immediately in your pet's behalf. Also, you can be assured his place is secure and sanitary and that your pet's diet will be followed precisely.

Third choice is a professional boarding kennel. Many of these establishments are run by truly conscientious, animal-loving people who are dedicated to giving your pet the finest possible care. They have a reputation to uphold and will do everything humanly possible to keep your pet happy and well.

Insist on inspecting the premises. Promises are not enough, and excuses that "strangers make the dogs nervous" is not a good reason for keeping you out. You have a right to see that the runs are clean and well-fenced, the dogs not penned together in a fight-producing "corral," the cats boarded well away from the dogs. If you have an unspayed female, you have the right to the assurance that she will not be accidentally be bred should she come into season during your absence.

If the premises are satisfactory and rates agreed upon, you should tell the proprietor your dog's diet, including any special additives needed. A good manager will want to know the dog's name, whether he is trained, an emergency phone number and so on. He will also insist on seeing proof of a current rabies vaccination and distemper-hepatitis-leptospirosis inoculation for dogs and enteritis-pneumonitis vaccine for cats. If he requires these things, he is not being difficult or picky. He is exhibiting proper concern for the welfare of his clients' pets. Only then should you entrust yours to him.

Ehrman succeeds Stanton as head of Symphony

A social event on Saturday afternoon, June 20th, at the Carmel Valley home of Virginia and Robert Stanton, climaxed the season of the Monterey County Symphony Association with invitations to the annual meeting going to all season ticket holders and Symphony Association members.

A short business meeting covered election of the following slate of officers for the 1970-71 season: Kenneth A. Ehrman, president; W. Webster Downer, first v. pres.; Stephen Magyar, second v. pres.; Jascha Veissi, third v. pres.; Harold R. Apgar, treasurer; Mrs. Lee Darragh, recording secretary, and Mrs. Howard S. Bucquet, corresponding secretary.

The outgoing president, Robert Stanton, expressed thanks to all board members for their help during the past season and turned the meeting over to the new president, Kenneth Ehrman. Ehrman congratulated Robert Stanton and the board for their successful efforts in overcoming the financial deficit from the preceding season.

A highlight of the afternoon was the presentation of a $5,000 check to the Symphony Association by James Costello, representing the Monterey Jazz Festival. With this check, the Jazz Festival has given the Symphony a total of $12,500 from its profits since 1965, thus making it possible for the Symphony to sponsor the Youth Symphony.

The announcement of Col. C. H. DuVal's retirement from the position of business manager for the Symphony was made and sincere appreciation expressed for his five years of service. Mrs. John P. Beahan, former president of the Monterey Peninsula Choral Society, was named to succeed Col. DuVal. John Farr continues as personnel manager for the orchestra, assisting Maestro Haymo Taeuber, Conductor and Music Director.

Following the business meeting, guests were entertained by a musical interlude in the Viennese manner played by orchestra members Henry Baron, Dorothy Elster, Mary Jane Sprung, Louise Vadetsky and Leo Stuckens, with Maestro Taeuber at the piano.

Champagne punch with unusual accompaniments of cheese wafers, open face sandwiches and the Mexican jicomas root were served to the large gathering of Peninsula and Salinas Association and Guild members present. Mrs. Thomas A. Roper, president of the Peninsula Guild and Mrs. Hal Schmechel, president of the Salinas Chapter joined board members in compliments to the gracious hosts for a delightful afternoon.

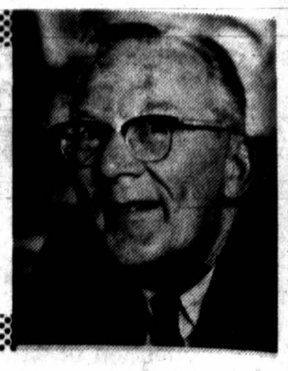
the conscience of Carmel



BY GUNNAR NORBERG

Carmel's five city councilmen—sometimes just a bare majority of them—hold the fate of the city in their hands. Sometimes the responsibility is well understood, sometimes only partially, sometimes hardly at all. It is because just enough councilmen cared, at critical moments through the years, that Carmel continues to be the distinguished community it still is. Caring by itself, however, is not enough. Knowing what to do is also indispensable, along with the courage to put that knowledge to work.

While care for Carmel and the courage to stand up for it can hardly be taught, the knowledge to make the care effective and to back up the courage can be learned if there are teachers or textbooks around.

Certain texts for city councilmen are, or should be, readily at hand—California's Government Code, the state's Planning Act, the city's Municipal Code, League of California Cities studies and related publications. (Twelve years ago, when I began my first city council term here, I was given a copy of only one of these—the Municipal Code—and it took a great deal of effort and time to get the others from the city hall staff).

There are, therefore, certain books of laws or rules or guidance publications either available or procurable, which councilmen can study. But there are no teachers in the usual sense, and there is little teaching in any ordinary sense. City department heads (whom the city council can hire or fire) generally make one of several assumptions about new councilmen: that they don't know anything and don't need to; that the less they know, the better, that some councilmen think of their election as an anointment and thus feel fully adequate without even giving a thought to learning anything at all.

What is true of Carmel city councilmen is true equally throughout California. In fact, Carmel councilmen are generally considered a superior lot—even though people here sometimes would find that description extravagant.

What's the answer? What should be done not only to educate new councilmen here but also everywhere else in the state?

In every school system maintaining an adult school program, there could be a course for would-be city councilmen—a course taught by experienced mayors, councilmen, city managers, city attorneys. There could be a two-year curriculum—an elementary and an advanced course. Then, after an initial two-year period, there could be a new requirement added to state law, specifying that every inexperienced future city council candidate, would have had to complete such a councilmanic course before even being eligible for any council candidacy.

To give voters a better chance to pick better councilmen, and to give city government more continuity, the provisions in state law with regard to city elections could be changed to call for the election of one city councilman every year. This would supersede the present every-other-year election system in which two councilmen are elected for one year and then, two years later, the three other councilmen are voted into office.

Now each voter votes either for two councilmen or three councilmen at a time. Since there is no weighting of the votes—nobody knows how many first choice, second choice, or third choice votes make up any candidate's total vote. Thus a man with many third choice votes could be elected while a man with fewer total votes, but with more first choice votes, could be defeated. When this happens, the true will of the electorate is basically frustrated, and city governments can also suffer.

Since municipal election costs are only a trifling part of a city's annual expense—in Carmel representing perhaps a quarter of a cent on the tax rate—the holding of such elections every year, instead of every other year, would have only a miniscule effect on the city budget. At the same time if, every year, voters would be marking ballots only for a single council candidate, the candidate elected would inevitably be the first choice of the voters at that particular election.

If then, the term of a city councilman were to be extended from the present four-year period to a five-year one, the annual election of a single councilman would generally assure that four out of the five incumbent councilmen at any given time, would be experienced. (Provisions in state law for the recall of any or all city councilmen through initiative action, would still protect voters from arbitarry government by heedless councilmen).

At the present time, four out of the five Carmel city councilmen were not in office just a little more than two years ago. Such a situation could hardly have developed if there had been annual elections of one councilman at a time, and if each one had had a five-year term. While the existing situation on the City Council here may present no serious peril, it could do so, and quite unnecessarily, here and elsewhere.

Wayfarer to honor new minister

Members of the Church of the Wayfarer will hold a reception honoring their newly appointed minister, Dr. Herbert W. Neale, and Mrs. Neale, in the church's Garden Room, July 5 from 3 to 5 p.m.

Dr. Neale will assume his new duties July 1. He comes to Carmel following a three-year pastorate at the First Methodist Church of Fresno.

The Neales will live in the parsonage recently purchased by the church at 3293 Trevis Way. They have four children.

Daughter Rebecca lives in Los Angeles. Their daughter Paula's husband, John Boogaert, is a student at Southern California School of Theology. Kathryn is a junior at the University of California at Riverside, and son John is a senior in high school.

Before Dr. Neale's service in Fresno he was superintendent of the San Jose District with supervision over the church in Carmel, from 1961 to 1966. He received his B.A. degree from Wooster College, his B.D. degree from Yale Divinity School, and was awarded an honorary D.D. degree from the University of the Pacific in 1966.

A farewell dinner for the outgoing pastor Reverend Alexander Bryans, and Mrs. Bryans will be held tomorrow evening. The Reverend Bryans, who has served the Church of the Wayfarer for four and a half years, has been appointed to the First United Methodist Church of Santa Rosa. Next Sunday is his last one with this church.

"My Pine Cone classified ad brought me all the work I can handle," declared certified landscape gardener Warren Rosenau of Pebble Beach.

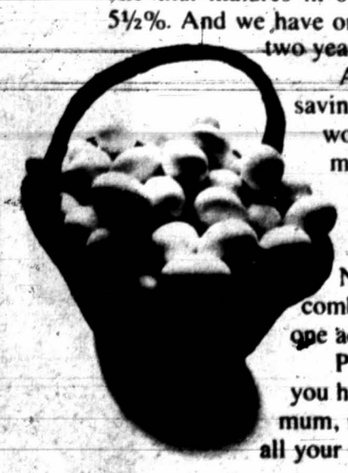
What you can do with $500 in a UCB passbook would take $1500 anywhere else.

At UCB, like everywhere else, we have special savings plans. We have one that matures in 90 days and pays 5%. We have one that matures in one year and pays 5½%. And we have one that matures in two years and pays 5¾%.

At any other place, savings plans like these would each require a minimum deposit of $500. So that it would take $1500 to get in all three. Not at UCB. We've combined them all into one account – our 3-in-1 Passbook. So that if you have the $500 minimum, it would pay to put all your eggs in our basket.



Like this, for example:

You can split your deposit any way you feel like. And, as you can see, part of your deposit can always be earning the maximum interest without tying up the rest of it too long.

UCB's also the only place where you can add to your deposit in any amount. There's no $100 minimum any more. So if you have, say, $75 sitting around, you don't have to wait until you dig up another $25 before you start earning interest.

If you're already rich, UCB's 3-in-1 Passbook may not mean much to you. But if $500 is about all your budget will allow in one crack, you'll make more money with it at UCB.

the business scene in Carmel

By JAMES PETER COST
President, Carmel Business Assn.

Every day of my life someone tells me how lucky I am to be living in Carmel, or should I say the area. I always agree and always express my appreciation and I am sincerely appreciative of this blessing. There are, of course, disadvantages to living in a small town or out in the hinterlands as I do, but by far living in this area is a way of life many people envy.

Many people look forward to living here someday and obviously a great many actually fulfill that dream. I know two people who were actually born here. One is Stan Ewig and the other is now living in Long Beach. Most of the other residents of the area that I know arrived here from some place else as I did. I'll take this a step or two further.

Not only did I arrive here from someplace else, but primarily by accident rather than by design. Sam Sullivan, a part-time Carmel resident from Laredo, Texas wrote in the Laredo Times, "There must be thousands of us who are fervently grateful because we failed to get certain jobs or were fired from others...or consider how many of us can sigh contentedly because some sweet young thing we once courted refused to say yes. Let us give thanks, not alone for the visible benefits but also for the veiled ones, the bad breaks that turned out to be good ones later on."

We could tell each other stories about the great depression, broken glasses, the war, getting kicked off the football team and all the other milestones that would best be described as failures that altered our lives and finally resulted in our arrival here. It is not true in all cases, of course. Many people I know visited Carmel, liked it and decided to move here. However, I am reasonably certain they are the exceptions. Also, in a very small minority are those among us who live here but would rather live elsewhere. I know a number of them. On occasion, I fall into that category myself as, I am sure, you do also.

In my own case, you wouldn't believe the chain of accidental circumstances, failures, good breaks and bad that resulted in the fulfillment of my dream.

Carmel is Mecca for most artists. The subject matter is here. The weather is conducive to long hours of work all day and all night. The light is unobscured by smog, etc., not to mention the quality of visitor, the art patron, the collector who comes to Carmel. Let's face it. Carmel is an art town. Carmel is an art center at the very least and the art center probably. I'm here by accident, but also because this is where it is for artists.

I am a professional artist but I'm not a professional business man in the generally accepted sense of the word. The fact is, I'm an amateur businessman, and maybe it is better that way. I'm not hamstrung by thinking I know everything about business.

There are many real honest-to-goodness professional businessmen in town—people who were professional jewelers, professional apparel shop operators, restaurateurs, salesmen, etc., etc. However, they do not make up the bulk of the shop owners but they probably make up the largest single group—that is, professionally trained people working in the area in which they were trained.

What about the engineer from Salt Lake City, the doctor from Dallas, the retired colonel from Seattle, the advertising director from Detroit who fulfills his dreams or by accident or fate finds himself living in Carmel? He examines the situation after he gets here and finds the area will not support another part-time man in his field, let alone a full-time man. He does not want to retire completely so he examines his qualifications this time and finds he has enough money to buy or open a specialty shop.

If he is lucky or wise he buys or opens a good shop in a good location and becomes successful beyond his wildest dreams. If he is not lucky or wise in business, he still fulfills the dream of living in Carmel. Rarely does he go out of business but he does do the thing he wanted to do—live in Carmel.

I estimate that about 40 per cent of the businesses in Carmel are operated (most of them successfully) by people who were trained in fields other than the one they are in. About 50 per cent of the businesses are operated by people trained in the specific area in which they work. The remaining 10 per cent fall into my category. They are part of each, that is, trained in a skill or service but with limited training in business or sales.

I estimate 95 per cent are here because they love Carmel and not because they came here to make a killing in business. Certainly, if money-making is a man's single motivating factor he wouldn't be in Carmel. Visitors come to Carmel to see the town, to wander around. Buying is incidental to seeing the town. If a man wanted to make a killing in business, he would go to a shopping center. People go to the shopping centers to shop and not to see the town and wander through the crooked lanes and courts.

I estimate that all of us, regardless of how we got here or what our purpose is or how proficient we are, are the most envied people on earth.

New 3-in-1 Savings Plan offered by UCB

A unique savings instrument, combining three types of savings plans into single passbook, was introduced Monday at United California Bank's Carmel office and at 227 other UCB branches throughout the state, it was announced by Donald R. Nelson, manager of the Carmel office, located at Ocean Avenue at Lincoln, in Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Nelson said that the innovative new account, called the 3 in 1 Passbook, incorporates some of the basic features of the bank's current savings plans paying 5 percent on a 90-day maturity, 5½ percent on a one-year maturity, and 5¾ percent on a two-year maturity. Anywhere else, he pointed out, the customer would be required to open three separate accounts with a minimum initial deposit of $1500 and could add to them only in increments of at least $100. The UCB depositor needs only $500 to open a 3 in 1 Passbook, and there is no minimum on additional deposits.

"Since the customer can divide his deposit any way he chooses, part of his funds will always be earning the maximum 5¾ percent without tying up the remainder for a prolonged period of time," Nelson said.

Interest can be retained in the account, increasing the effective yield, paid out quarterly by check, or credited to another UCB account. Customers can also arrange for periodic automatic transfers of funds from their checking accounts to the 3 in 1 Passbook.

"This new program was developed to meet the short, intermediate, and long term needs of depositors, consistent with their interest earnings objectives. Since the account offers a simple and flexible method of saving never before available, it gives a whole new group of savers the opportunity to realize maximum earnings with a minimum tie-up of funds," Nelson continued.

'Pigeon Roost' at Wayfarer

A two-act play, The Pigeon Roost, will be staged by the Rocky Road Scholars, a touring student company, in Fellowship Hall of the Church of the Wayfarer at 8 p.m., July 2.

The student showmen, from Rocky Mountain College, Billings, Montana, are taking their production to 15 cities. The play was written by Polly Holmes, widely known for her work in the field of religious drama, who spends every summer in Carmel. Her husband, Dr. Robert Holmes, is chaplain of the college.

The Pigeon Roost is set in Jerusalem two years after the crucifixion of Jesus, projecting into the present century. The presentation is open to the public at no charge. A freewill offering will be taken.

Two Carmel families joined

Two Carmel families were joined when Cynthia Russell and Kevin Hale exchanged marriage vows at Carmel Mission Basilica on June 14.

Cindy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Russell, was given in marriage by her father. The Reverend Felix Migliazzo performed the ceremony, witnessed by family members.

The bride's crepe gown had long sleeves of Venice type lace, a floating back panel and fingertip veil. She carried trailing stephanotis with orchids.

She was attended by Cathy Vickrey, wearing a long chartreuse gown and carrying a bouquet of matching carnations and white rosebuds.

The groom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Hale, chose Mike Corray as his best man, while James Vickrey was usher.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony. The couple honeymooned at Lake Tahoe.

Kevin and Cindy both attended Carmel schools. They will make their home here, with Kevin working in his father's camera shop.

Health Officer warns of sharp rise in VD

DR. COLLINS ADMINISTERING blood test in his Salinas office. This is routine procedure in detection of venereal disease.

Dr. Thomas Collins, in an interview this week with the Pine Cone, told of the "epidemic proportions" of venereal disease and especially gonorrhea in California and in Monterey County. Dr. Collins is very anxious to get information cincerning the problems of venereal disease to the people. Only in this way, he believes, can the serious incidence of gonorrhea hope to be checked.

Dr. Collins, could you give us your views about the relative magnitude of the venereal disease problem on the Monterey Peninsula?

Yes. Last year we had a total of 1,100 reported cases of gonorrhea in Monterey County. I stress the fact that these are only the reported cases, and many experts estimate that the actual number of cases can be anywhere from five to ten times the number of reported ones. In the State of California there were a total of 100,000 reported cases, such that this area, while slightly above average, is fairly close to the State rate.

There are no so-called "hot spots" of venereal disease in the County, except for what I call the transient or floating population, especially along Highway 1. I am convinced that the rate of gonorrhea is considerably higher in those individuals for many reasons. One of them is that they represent the ultimate in promiscuity or permissiveness or sexual freedom or whatever you want to call it. Secondly, they are less apt to have a physician; they're less apt to have funds to get into a private physician. They are less knowledgeable to the treatment facilities available to them in the community, because they may be moving up and down the coast. So, I think the rate is higher in that population.

But the rest of the more or less permanent or residential population share a fairly even distribution of venereal disease. Naturally, those communities having a higher proportion of the younger age groups are going to have a slightly higher percentage of gonorrhea and syphilis. Carmel, due to the number of older people residing here, would probably have a slightly lower rate than Pacific Grove. But here again, let me emphasize that accurate statistics are virtually impossible to compile. The best we can do is to estimate by extrapolating from our reported cases. We may be way off base or we may be accidentally precise.

But Carmel, although it has a problem with gonorrhea and is constantly being introduced to more of the same owing to its proximity to Highway 1, probably has a fairly low rate. Much of this is due to the great percentage of older people who live here.

What about syphilis?

The spread of syphilis is not going up that rapidly. In fact, we are just about holding our own, so to speak, on syphilis. I think one of the reasons for this difference of incidence in syphilis and gonorrhea is that syphilis, although a more serious disease, is more easily cured. In general, syphilis will respond to penicillin and shows little immunity to that drug. Also, syphilis takes longer to develop; and from an epidemo-logical standpoint, we can get many of the patients under prophylactic or preventative treatment before they actually develop the symptoms. It is sometimes several weeks before the symptoms occur. Thus, in many cases we can check the spread of the disease more easily than we can gonorrhea, which developes in a matter of days.

Would you say that gonorrhea is a major problem in high schools such as Carmel High School?

Going through the records of the past three years I noted a number of cases involving Carmel High School students. But the numbers are misleading. They are only those cases reported to us and represent any part of the total problem. Frankly, I do not personally think that gonorrhea is a rampant, severe problem as far as high school students, per se, are concerned. I think, however, that there is a rampant and severe problem in the slightly older age group -- those 18, 19, 20 and 21 -- that is the area where gonorrhea seems to be really mushrooming.

Statewide, gonorrhea has reached epidemic proportions. We consider a disease epidemic which has gone way beyond the normal levels, the endemic levels, which have been established through years of observation and record. Gonorrhea has been with us for as long, at least, as recorded medical history. But it has, except perhaps during wartime, remained fairly steady until recent years. In the last five years it has taken an accelerated trend upward, in spite of increased efforts of physicians and public health departments to control it.

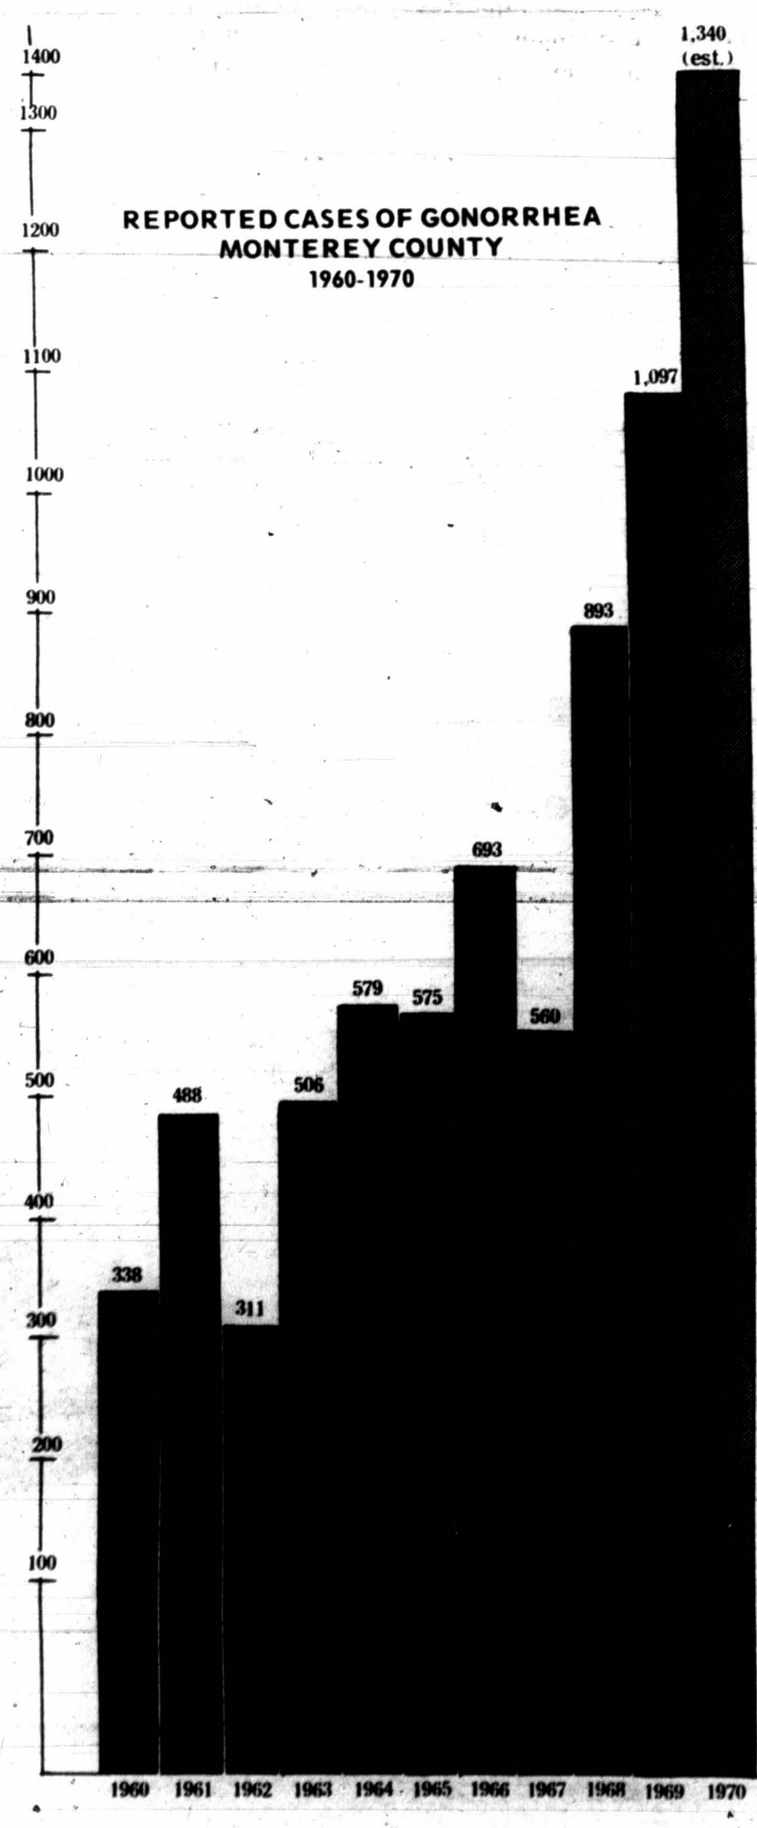
I think this rise is due, at least in part, to the changing standards of today's young people concerning sex. Previously, we found that the average age of people infected with gonorrhea was in the 30s and 40s. In the last five years that average has been lowering dramatically, until now it is in the lower twenties. But we cannot moralize. All we can do is to try to make people aware of this problem and dispell some of the misconceptions concerning VD, until, hopefully, we can stem this accelerating spread.

The drugs are now better than those we used to have. We know better how to treat gonorrhea, and yet, in spite of our medical knowledge and ability to cure cases, it is rising very rapidly.

What is adequate treatment for gonorrhea and syphilis?

Adequate treatment is not easily described. It means whatever is necessary to cure the particular case. It may vary. In most cases we start out with antibiotics in enough dosage to cure the average case. In other words, this is based on experience. If they follow the treatment as prescribed, in most cases they will be cured. But in the final analysis the only way we can be sure of a complete cure is to do one or more follow-up laboratory tests. One of the great problems of trying to control the spread of gonorrhea is that the antibiotics, even if insufficient in dosage to cure the case, will remove the symptoms; and the patient believes himself to be cured.

One of our problems with treatment has been that, in some cases, when we prescribe oral medication for treatment of gonorrhea, the patient will share the medication with his friends or companions, who may feel that they have been exposed to the disease. Such action is foolish, since each of the people who take the medication may get an insufficient dose to cure his case. Yet the symptoms may disappear and he may believe, erroneously, that he is well. In addition, his particular infectious organism will become harder to cure in the future.



More and more we are seeing cases that are resistant to the more frequently used antibiotics, such as penicillin. We may treat someone with penicillin and he will be promptly and completely cured. The next individual may have an organism which has become resistant to penicillin with varying degrees of response.

I have had cases in which I have had to run through three or four different types of antibiotics before I found one, in adequate dosage, which would completely cure the case. Often, since different "strains" of gonorrhea come from different parts of the world and have been exposed to different treatments during the history of their transmissions from person to person, many different types of antibiotics are necessary to effect a cure. And I want to dispell the myth that gonorrhea is an easy disease to treat. It is not; it is one of the hardest. Each individual must be given special, individual treatment.

Can you tell us about specific symptoms of venereal disease?

I think we will have to break this up into the two different diseases. Now, a venereal disease is one which is transmitted by sexual contact, and gonorrhea is by far the most common of the two, being about ten times more prevalent than syphilis, based on 1969 statistics.

Gonorrhea is a more local infection than syphilis, although in advanced stages gonorrhea can affect other parts of the body, such as the heart. Syphilis, in contrast, is more generalized and involves the whole body. It starts out as a local infection, usually with a lesion or sore on the genital area, but almost invariably spreads throughout the body.

The symptoms of gonorrhea, especially in the female, may be very minor or even non-existent, especially those which come to her attention. They may have an increase in vaginal discharge or a change in quality of the discharge. She may have some slight irritation in the genital area, but not always. In general, most females become aware of the fact that they may have contracted gonorrhea by being told so by the person who infected them.

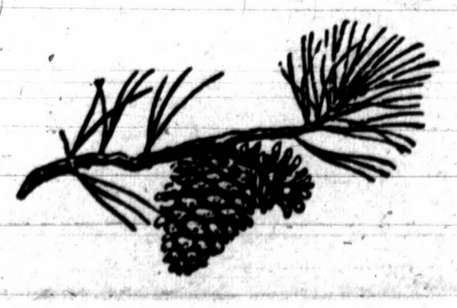
In the male, symptoms are more distinguishable. He will usually have a continuous discharge from the penis, either slight or very heavy, but continuous. Many males come in to see me with a kleenex wrapped around their penis to try to prevent the discharge from severely staining their clothes. Usually this discharge is accompanied by a burning or pain on urination.

What is being done to set up teaching programs in the schools?

Our job is to teach the teachers so that they can be more effective rather than put ourselves directly in front of the students. We simply haven't got the time. Currently we are planning a big workshop for administrators, teachers, school nurses and physical education teachers in the Salinas School District. If this goes well and the new Superintendent of Schools for Monterey County thinks the program is good, then he may insist upon having similar programs in all the districts.

In the schools we are dependent upon the school administrators for informational programs. Many schools cover venereal diseases and contagious diseases in their various health classes and programs.

As far as being able to reach those transient people with a high incidence of gonorrhea, we do not have an effective way of going about it. All information has to come indirectly either through the media, through literature distributed by the health department or by word of mouth. But we try to exploit every channel of communication we can. We appreciate any help we can get in this area, including opportunities such as this interview, to educate as many people as possible about the facts of venereal disease.



Bayless asks regulation of store interiors in Carmel

City Administrator Hugh Bayless last night called for the City Planning Commission to look into the possibility of regulating design approval for indoor business displays which are visible from any public street or public place.

Bayless also called for the Commission to establish standards for window displays and interior lighting which would "prohibit the garish and bizarre," in which case a majority of the Commission members would themselves be put under lock and key.

Planning Commission Chairman Olof Dahlstrand appointed an ad hoc committee to look into the recommendations. The committee consists of commissioners McEwen, Keeble and Neroda. The text of the City Administrator's report follows:

CONSIDERATION:

The protection and preservation of the central business district.

FINDINGS:

That the business districts of Carmel-by-the-Sea have long enjoyed a remarkable reputation for unique charm and for the quality of the distinctive and tasteful shops which have attracted the most desirable of visitors over the years.

That the success of Carmel's business district is reflected in the fact that over one-half of Carmel's budget is supported by revenues from the business district.

That the "face" of Carmel's business district is Ocean Avenue and its many shops which have maintained and reflected the "Carmel image".

That any appreciable change from the traditional appearance of Ocean Avenue could destroy the economy of Carmel's business community.

That the City Council, in order to protect Carmel's business district, established a Business License Review Board which must judge applications for business licenses on the basis of potentially deleterious effects of certain businesses or the manner of conducting otherwise innocuous businesses in such a way as to do harm to the city's economic health or violate the intent, if not the letter, of the General Plan and the Planning and Zoning Code.

That, particularly on Ocean Avenue, the interior portions of a business which are visible from the street can have just as much visual effect as the exterior design of the structure.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

That the Planning Commission explore and consider the possibilities of requiring design approval of all portions of a business structure in the C-1-C district which are visible from any public street or public place.

That the Planning Commission also consider establishing standards for window displays and interior lighting for all business districts which would prohibit the garish and bizarre.

Gregg L. McKee, Jr. of Carmel was awarded a Master's degree in business administration by the Harvard Business School on June 11 in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Three Carmel students received bachelors degrees Wednesday from the College of Letters and Science of the University of California at Davis. They are Hazel B. Jacoby, who majored in mathematics, Lorna A. Shoemaker, English, and Suzette A. Smith, English.

Movie makers do their thing in Carmel area

Tuesday in downtown Carmel, a movie production unit was on the scene filming footage for an upcoming movie "Thumb Tripping." The movie will concern the adventures of two people hitchhiking up the coast along Highway 1, and is based on a book by the same title which will be released this fall.

The book and the screenplay are the work of Don Mitchell, a 22 year old graduate of Swarthmore College, who spent much of last year thumbing up and down the California coast. The movie is being produced by Robert Chartoff and Erwin Winkler, whose last production, "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" was acclaimed throughout the world.

The stars of the picture are Michael Burns and Meg Foster, two relatively unknown actors, and the director is Quenton Masters, a 23 year old Australian, who is making his American premiere with this movie.

"Thumb Tripping" is not scheduled to finish shooting until August, and it will probably not be released until after the first of next year.

Spanish 'rolling stone' returns to Carmel with art, memories

A Spanish "rolling stone" dropped by Carmel last week to shake hands with Carmel mayor Barney Laiolo and show him a painting he had done of Father Serra.

Jose Ramis, 74 year old painter who has never settled anyplace for very long, has completed paintings of all the missions Father Serra founded along the California coast and in Mexico.

The collection now hangs in a museum in Spain, and Ramis brought a new painting to Carmel before adding it to the museum exhibit.

Father Serra stands in the middle of the painting with two Indian children. In the background, right, is the Carmel Mission, with Point Lobos in the far background and a field of California's state flowers, the poppy, in the foreground.

On the left is Carmel's sister city in Spain, Petra, with a characteristic Spanish flower, the butterfly flower, in the foreground.

"I have a picture of myself with the mayor of Petra in front of this painting," said Ramis, explaining the reason for his visit. "Now I want a picture of myself with the Carmel mayor. I think it is very appropriate, especially since it is the Bicentennial."

FATHER SERRA AS SEEN BY RAMIS

Ramis' journey to Carmel was long and chance-filled.

"I left Spain in 1919 when I was 22, with no thoughts of becoming a painter," he said.

"I came from a big family and my father liked to gamble. When he died I found myself the heir to a big mortgage, but I knew a friend in Texas who put me wise." Following the friend's suggestion, he left for the Americas.

"First I went to Cuba, then to Venezuela where there was a big revolution, then to Colombia where I caught malaria, and, finally, in June 1921 I went to Los Angeles," he reminisced. "I could not speak a word of English, and was not a painter yet.

"I worked on farms and in lumber mills, and I paid off the mortgage in one year," he continued. "Then something happened that changed my life. I had an accident, resulting in a double fracture to my left leg."

Unable to work, Ramis started to paint. "All my life people had told me I had talent," he said. "But when I told my father that he said painting was no good to cultivate fields."

The fracture healed, and he again started his travels as a "rolling stone." He again went to Indian villages, here and in South America and painted scenes from daily life and especially the fiestas.

In 1924 Ramis came to Carmel and stayed until 1927. For two years he worked as a guide to the Carmel Mission, sometimes giving bullfights to raise money.

"We had to raise money, so we put on three bullfights," Ramis remembered. "I knew two other bullfighters from San Francisco and they came, and a big rich man in the valley loaned us three bulls. We earned eight to ten thousand dollars."

Those were the times Ramis calls the good old days.

"I cannot go back to any of those places to paint now," he said. "In 1947 I went to an Indian village, but I was so heartbroken I only stayed two days and left. Instead of the beautiful handmade mocassins they used to wear, they were all wearing discarded G.I. boots."

He stopped painting about 10 years ago. "I don't want to go against the current. Now everything is abstract, and I am very pictorial."

But he still is a rolling

GETTING TO KNOW YOU

Writing a newspaper column can be a rather awe-inspiring experience if one thinks about it too much. After I had agreed to take my pen in hand in the name of art, I began to have great feelings of insecurity and self-doubt, but my first day "on the beat" proved to me that the people I'm to write about are going to do my job for me. The whole day turned into a delightful experience, and one that I hope will repeat itself each week.

Going from gallery to gallery I met such interesting people, both artists and salespersons, that my notebook pages filled rapidly with bits of information which I would like to share with you. Too often in the bustle of everyday life we forget to take time to just chat with people, and the other day I found out just how enjoyable this can be.

Dropping into Emile Norman's gallery on Mission between 5th and 6th I learned that Emile has just returned from a trip around the world, and brought back with him many rare woods from Ceylon which he will use in his beautifully crafted inlay sculptures. Also, from the Great Barrier Reef off the coast of Australia he picked up beautiful pieces of coral as well as shells obtained by skin diving in the Coral Sea.

These will eventually find their way into new pieces of sculpture. Until now all his marble sculpture has been done at his studio in Pietrasanta, Italy, near the great marble deposits, but Emile has had several pieces of marble shipped to his Big Sur studio where he will begin work on a new bas relief sculpture. Presently he is working on a wood sculpture of two Osprey in flight.

Down the walkway to San Carlos between 5th and 6th in the Harold Shelton Gallery I met Eloise Kozak, who operates the gallery several days a week. Eloise's husband, Andrew Kozak, whose graphics are shown in Carmel Valley, plans to attend the Jade Fan watercolor workshop at Asilomar in July. Mrs. Kozak also mentioned that Mr. Shelton's wife is soon due to return from a month's visit with her youngest daughter in the South of France.

Two new galleries opened last Friday in Carmel. The Matrix II is located above Su Vecino's and features metal sculpture by Purdy and the beautiful batik work of Sakura. Many of you may have seen Purdy's delicate metal sculptures at the Matrix I Gallery on Cannery Row.

Village Artistry, next to Armand's Beauty Shop on Dolores, is a handsomely designed gallery featuring both paintings and fine craft work from a number of artists. The Spanish theme is well carried out throughout the shop featuring an arch motif and red and white color scheme with wrought iron and wood accents. Carmel artists featured are: Vi Dawson, Virginia Ford, Jerry Elwood, Mary Solovey, oils; Jeanne Ocker, Barbara Greenberg, watercolor; Ron Russell, Robert Landman, Chic Vicino, pottery; Ann Berthoin, enamel work; and Howell Armor, wood sculpture. The shop is owned by two Carmel couples, Bill and Gerry McFall, and Glen and Pat Myers.

I enjoyed a nice visit with Bob Davey in his gallery in the Su Vecino Court, and Bob tells me that his son and daughter-in-law, Mark and Melissa, who are both Carmel High graduates, plan to continue their study at California College of Arts and Crafts in Oakland. Mark has a summer job at C.C.A.C. and the couple live in Piedmont. One of Melissa's beautiful stitcheries in on display in Bob's gallery.

xxx

Les Laky plans to open a new show of George DeGroat's work in the Laky Gallery on San Carlos between 5th and 6th on June 28. Instead of his oil paintings, this will be a show of graphics and promises to be very exciting.

xxx

John La Pierre is currently featured at the Carmel Art Association on Dolores with a show of collages. John's work is always colorful and well-done, but in this show I particularly liked his two abstracts entitled "Blue Green and Red," and "Dishirage." "View of Rondo" and "Boulder Creek," two representational collages, were particularly outstanding for their good use of negative space.

xxx

Fred Klepich always has a jolly word when I drop in to see him at S.A.S. Gallery, San Carlos, south of Ocean, and this time he shared with me some of Betty Harrington's new etchings and aquatints. "Lonesome Farm," printed in sepia, is extremely sensitive and shows the graphic technique at its best. Babs Balzer also has a nice metal sculpture of a running figure, which shows a strong degree of movement.

In the afternoon I visited with Dorothy Bowman at the Sunset Cultural Center. On July 4, from 1-6 p.m., she plans to have a second "Artists in Action" session. She hopes that both Carmelites and visitors will take advantage of what our Cultural Center has to offer.

Art Guerra was just arriving to conduct his first of eight painting sessions. Pat Carey, Vi Dawson, and Bob Horne are all joining the class. Mr. Guerra has several paintings on display in the lobby of Sunset Theater, and I found them to be a strong statement of the contemporary scene painted in a style reminiscent of Edward Hopper combined with Matisse and Zurbaran.

Tom Broadbent, whose wood-working shop is located in the Valley Hills Shopping Center, has just finished building a black walnut altar for St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Walnut Creek. The carving, which shows the symbols of the 12 apostles, was done by Roy McConchie of Carmel, and the finish was put on by Frank Solomon, also of Carmel. The front of the altar also shows a carving of chalices with rays spreading away.

Spanish 'rolling stone' returns stone. "I returned home in 1965 with the dream of staying," he said. "But when you have been a rolling stone for 50 years you cannot stay put."

After visiting with Mayor Laiolo and his friends in the area, Ramis again left Carmel. "I'm on my way to Santa Barbara, then back to San Francisco, and then, I don't know yet," he said.

"But I'll be back."

Mate of Navy flier tells Kiwanis of disappearance

Mrs. Elizabeth Sherman of Carmel spoke to the Carmel Kiwanis Club luncheon last week about the disappearance of her husband, Commander Peter W. Sherman when his flight was attacked over enemy territory in Viet Nam three years ago.

He is believed to be a prisoner of war, but Mrs. Sherman has had no word from him. Recently, the Kiwanis have been conducting a letter-writing campaign to Congress and other officials to try to get word of POWs whose families have not heard from them.

Also speaking at the meeting were William Blauer, Carmel director of the Suicide Prevention Center of Monterey County and Mrs. Jean Post, counsellor. Volunteers who can afford to give four hours a week to this service are asked to call 372-6994 or 624-1706 for further information.

Tourists to be quizzed in transportation study

Tourists leaving Carmel after their summer visits are liable to be given a chance to tell about the trip before they ever get home to their envious neighbors, according to plans for the Salinas-Monterey Area Transportation Study (SMATS).

Roadside Origin-and-Destination interviews began June 24th, Bill Curtis, chairman of SMATS' Policy Advisory Committee, has announced.

The roadside interviews will be conducted at the study boundaries on the outbound lanes of all major roads, such as Highways 1 and 101, the Carmel Valley Road and on the Pajaro River bridge in Watsonville, and the cordon stations will be manned at various times and locations through mid-August.

Designed to supplement the travel information obtained from the home interview portion of SMATS now in progress, the roadside interviews will question primarily tourists visiting the area, who are not subject to other phases of the study.

The data obtained by the ten-man interview crew, mostly college students especially hired and trained for this job, will be combined with information gathered by the other phases of SMATS to provide advanced transportation planning guidance.

Such information will be invaluable to planners and engineers in all the agencies cooperating in the study: the seven incorporated cities of the area—Carmel, Del Rey Oaks, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Salinas, Sand City and Seaside, Monterey County, the State of California and the federal government.

Personalized tours by car available

William E. Walker, general manager of Chartered Limousine Service, Inc., announced recently that they are introducing personalized tours for people visiting the Carmel area.

The limousines are available for any number of passengers, up to 14. They can be rented for sightseeing tours, either planned or informal. Some of the suggested local tours include 17 Mile Drive, a tour of Carmel, Old Monterey, Point Lobos and special after-dark tours featuring the nightlife of the Peninsula.

In addition, limousines can be arranged for longer sojourns to both the Hearst Castle at San Simeon and San Juan Bautista.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Sir:

Your very thorough article on the proposed Hatton Canyon Freeway extension illustrates the very tragic degree to which Carmel does not possess the requisites of a viable community. First, the Carmel City Council has no legal right to even offer an opinion on how land should be used in areas outside the city limits. In fact, the Council has a moral duty not to take a position. Carmel residents have seen fit over the years to rigidly maintain the city's initial political boundaries rather than extending its services and political facilities to each new area as it has developed. We voteless outsiders should be given an opportunity to participate in matters that affect our welfare. But, of course, this is quite unlikely to occur: Many of us outsiders, if given a vote, should want to stop the traditional meretricious orientation in land-use control that ostensibly endeavors to maximize motel and curio shop sales and minimize citizens' civil rights.

Second, the choice between doing nothing, widening the present Route 1, or bringing Junipero Serra to freeway standards should be decided in the correct logic. Specifically, it is incorrect and deceptive to view the present Route 1 as "insufficient" or "overcrowded." More correctly, the economically proper kind of highway facility should be defined in terms of the costs of providing a given travel time, the number of persons who will benefit from a reduction in their trip duration and how much they would be willing to pay for this. The fact that a few motels will get more business is inadequate logic. So too is the reasoning that the development of Fish Ranch or Carmel Valley can thence profitably proceed. All the costs and all the benefits should be included in an evaluation. Unless the California State Division of Highways has drastically changed its analytical methods, the requisite studies for determining how much of the taxpayers' scarce income should be devoted to this new road have never been done. Travel the Bayshore Freeway at 5 p.m. any weekday and decide how scarce tax dollars can be best allocated for reducing travel times.

Thirdly, it is well to view matters in perspective. Suppose the new Hatton Canyon Freeway is built. Will this solve anything? Real estate developments will accelerate. Additional thousands will come to view (from their cars) the Big Sur Region. We will soon have to begin planning an even wider freeway—and then it quite logically should be extended to the Big Sur State Park. And then why not on to San Luis Obispo?

The point is: We have been so immersed in rapid expansion of highways and auto travel that we have lost control of the whole social process. Somehow, the rights of citizens as motorists must be balanced against the citizens' rights of privacy. The auto has only been around in any numbers for some 50 years and we are still very much learning how to best adapt our community organization to it. We have learned how to painlessly and efficiently finance highway construction but not much else. It is high time we start. The new editorial policy of the Carmel Pine Cone represents a good beginning.

Sincerely,
Dr. Paul M. Carrick
25233 Ward Place
Carmel

Gentlemen:

My husband and I have lived on Atherton Drive, Hatton Fields, for 22 years and have been through all of the discussions and meetings having to do with putting a road through Hatton Canyon. I also drive out Atherton Drive onto Highway 1 at least once a day, so am aware of the great amount of traffic now on this highway. I frequently have to wait quite a while if I want to turn toward Monterey, and it is dangerous. I am, therefore, as interested as anyone could be in putting some of the cars some place else.

If the State Highway Department could be persuaded to do something quickly, however, I would prefer to see them get to work immediately on a road through Canada de la Segunda, as I believe this would alleviate much of the traffic on Highway 1, to say nothing of being of great help to people living in the valley who drive to Monterey and vice versa. Besides, it should add another pleasant country drive which we badly need in this area.

After this is done, we will probably need another road parallel to Highway 1 to take the through traffic, and that would be time enough to build the projected one through Hatton Canyon.

Very truly yours,
Helen Lambert

Bach Festival near, tickets selling fast

The promise of the Carmel Bach Festival's ten days of intimate recitals, illuminating lectures and inspiringly beautiful concerts has once again captured the interest of hundreds who have already assured their presence at the 33rd annual summer Festival.

Programs of unusual interest, outstanding vocal and instrumental soloists and the undisputed reputation for the unique quality of the Festival Orchestra, Chorale and Chorus, all under the direction of Maestro Sandor Salgo, insure another sold-out season from July 17th through July 26th.

Not a single ticket is available for Johann Sebastian Bach's great Mass in B minor on Sunday, July 19th. Only a few scattered seats remain for opening night July 17th and for the concerts on the 18th and 20th. However, for those who have procrastinated there is hope! The concerts of the 17th and 18th will be repeated on the 24th and 25th and box-office reports offer encouragement with a wider selection of seating locations for those performances.

Soloists' night on Tuesday, July 21st will present an innovation. Contralto Pauline Law, basso Thomas Paul and flutist Donald Peck will be featured in the first half of the program with the second half devoted to renaissance and baroque works performed by the Camerata Musicale of Los Angeles. The group of four artists is very active in the Los Angeles area where their standards of performance have gained them an enviable reputation.

On Thursday night, July 23rd, Sandor Salgo will conduct Haydn's "Sinfonia Concertante" and Handel's great ode, "Alexander's Feast," or "The Power of Music" with soloists Mary Ellen Pracht, Seth McCoy and Thomas Paul and the Festival Chorus and Orchestra.

The 1970 Festival will have a dramatically colorful and delightful finale on Sunday afternoon, July 26th, when Mozart's last opera, "The Magic Flute" will be presented in English in concert form. The score is astonishing in its variety and scope and the extremely high and florid arias make the Queen of the Night one of the most difficult of soprano parts. Joan Zaoac will add her brilliance to this demanding role and Festival favorite, basso Thomas Paul will sing the majestic arias of Sarastro with tenor Seth McCoy as Taminop baritone Douglas Lawrence in the role of Papageno, Margot Power as Papagena and Ted Jameson as Monostatos.

For ticket information and purchase the Festival box office in room 3 of Sunset Cultural Center is open from 10:00 - noon and from 1:00 to 4:00.

LaVonne Andrews, Bill Asp star in 'Stop the World'

LaVonne Rae Andrews and Bill Asp have the leads in "Stop The World—I Want To Get Off," the musical comedy opening Friday at the Studio Theatre-Restaurant. The versatile Miss Andrews was The Girl in "The Fantasticks" for the Presidio Players and appeared in "Black Comedy" and "George M!" for the Studio.

She has also performed in "Brigadoon," "Fiorello" and "Oklahoma" for the Naval Postgraduate School Little Theater. In "Stop The World" she plays Evie as well as three other girls who tempt the hero, in a multi-faceted role portraying eternal woman.

As Littlechap, an ordinary guy who goes through life mixing triumph with frustration, Asp gets to sing several of the show's major hits, including the climactic "What Kind O f Fool Am I?" He has just been seen in "A Shot In The Dark" and two summers ago played Paul in "Carnival" at the Studio. Asp also directed "Stop The World."

Becky Douglas (Susan), Evelyn Hughes (Jane) and Peter Granoff (The Boy) were in the Carmel High School production of "Carnival" last month, as were chorus members Mindy Rayne and Nina Weisman. Others in the chorus are John Baker of "Brigadoon" at the Postgraduate School and Marie Catey, Monica Madden and Wynn White who are making their local stage debuts.

After its opening Friday, "Stop The World" will play at the Studio nightly except Monday and Tuesday through July.

Three major big bands set for Monterey Jazz Festival

Three major big bands—those of Duke Ellington, Woody Herman and Buddy Rich—will be featured at this year's Monterey Jazz Festival.

The Festival, now in its thirteenth year, will be held September 18, 19, 20 in the 7000-seat outdoor arena of the Monterey County Fairgrounds. It will consist of five separate and different concerts—Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings and Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

The Duke Ellington band will perform during the Friday evening concert, September 18; Woody Herman, Saturday evening, September 19 and Buddy Rich, Sunday evening the 20th. Other artists will perform in these concerts as well but have not yet been signed and announced.

Jimmy Lyons, Festival general manager also announced that the internationally-known musical event will "return this year to an all jazz policy." For the past several years the Festival has included in its program a number of leading rock bands and performers.

THE PHONE BOOTH

You might think "instant replay" is only used in football games on TV, but the Phone Company is also taking advantage of this technique at one of our training schools for installers. The installers—people who put in your phone—practice their jobs with other Telephone people who take the role of customers. These practice sessions, which simulate situations our men encounter on the job, are videotaped and replayed so the men can see how well they performed. Besides checking to see that they install the equipment correctly, we're also interested in their grooming, deportment and ability to handle situations. This is another way we try to make sure our installers are real pros before they go out on the job.

Sunrise to Sunset

By DOROTHY BOWMAN

Friday has arrived once again, and it's column writing time. As my thoughts linger over our activities at Sunset Center this week, I hope in some small way that the enthusiasm we feel for our Sunset program does rub off a little as you scan these lines.

I am more than grateful to our Cultural Commission and City Council for approving Miss Nancy Larson as my new part-time secretary. I should be more than pleased to have you take a stroll down San Carlos way to meet Nancy who mans our attractively refurbished office during the afternoon (1-5).

Nancy is a native of South Dakota (Sioux Falls in particular), but moved to California from Boulder, Colo., where she worked for the University of Colorado. Her "wanderlust" took her on extensive travels around the world, spending a year both in Paris and in Korea. Now she thinks she's ready to settle, and has chosen Carmel as the most desirable spot. Her interests in the arts, especially music, fit in well with the cultural environment at Sunset Center.

Another Nancy—Nancy Clavin—is joining the Center to teach a class in Creative Crafts for youngsters from 12-15 years. She will emphasize mosaics, stitchery and mobiles in this six-week course beginning July 6. The classes will be held on Monday and Wednesday mornings from 9:30 to noon. You may call the Sunset Office (624-3996) for more information.

Art Guerra's painting class began last Friday afternoon, and there is still room for more students. He is teaching oil painting from beginning to advanced. His fascinating one-man show continues to be on exhibit at Sunset through July 1.

"Mexico, a Non-Tourist View" had a successful showing in our auditorium Friday evening. George and Inger Wallace's enthusiasm about their visits with the Mexican people, plus their artistic slides and regional music, resulted in a worthwhile evening. We hope to have more programs of this caliber in the future.

Since the weaving demonstration at our last "Artists in Action" was received with such interest, we have arranged to have even more weavers at our next open house on July 4. Twelve members of the Carmel Craft Guild will be at work on their looms and wheels.

Also scheduled for that Saturday afternoon are Albert Daoud and his group of ethnic dancers. These are only two of the many activities being planned for the holiday program which will include demonstrations of our resident artists at work as well. Our "Artists in Action" programs on the first Saturday of the month are gaining interest in the community, and hopefully will become a well-established cultural tradition in Carmel.

'Anything Goes' opens and it's 'De-lightful'

"Anything Goes" opened at the Circle Theatre last night and will run until the end of August. In the words of Cole Porter, "It was delightful, de-lovely and delectable."

The plot was pure musical comedy featuring very funny Michael Keller as Moonface, Public Enemy no. 13, Layne Littlepage as the brassy Reno Sweeney, Annabel Lund as a goo-goo-eyed gangster's moll, Roy Baxter as an English chappie straight out of P.G. Wodehouse, Mark Oman as Billy Crocker and Anne Brown Trivitte as Gope Hercourt.

If you want to escape the grim realism of current movie and TV entertainment, it is this critic's recommendation that you visit the Circle Theatre this summer and get aboard the SS America, with Reno Sweeney and her chorus of beauties, and make the transatlantic crossing with the Golden Bough Players. It's a voyage to the evergreen music of the thirties, "I Get a Kick Out of You", "It's De-Lovely", "Friendship" and "Anything Goes."

And when the good ship SS America finally docks you'll be as sorry as the talented cast that the curtain had to come down.

Mike Keller, who also directed and staged the production, succeeded admirably in capturing the essence of this zany but melodious comedy--one of Cole Porter's more notable Broadway hits.

The entire cast performed with zest and zing, and the musical numbers were notably well done. Mr. Keller had the most able assistance of Tom Fordham as music director, Dan Cawthon as chorus director.

PARTY PLANS . . .

by Phyllis Jervey

This is the time when a group of close Carmel friends start forth every Sunday for a beach picnic. At first we had so-called surprise offerings by bringing our own choice. But when too many potato salads started an aversion to same, we decided to have a huge pot of seafood Carmel type "bouillabaisse"...meaning an assortment of fish, shrimp, clam "stew."

The three celebrated strongholds of bouillabaisee, that most famous of seafood soups, are Marseilles where it originated, New Orleans where it continued in the true French manner...and now Carmel.

Thackeray, after praising his favorite dish as prepared for him in Paris, declared "in New Orleans their bouilla-baisse is the like of which was never enjoyed in Marseilles or Paris!"

Who makes the best bouillabaisee in Carmel? American Clyde Herr, with his gracious French wife Genevieve, who own La Marmite Restaurant in Carmel, have created the best.

Let's call their version (for the uninitiated) the most superior "Fish Carmel Chowder" with its saffron color and ocean taste. This specialty our small group tries its utmost to imitate when we beachcomb. Sunset Magazine featured Carmel Clyde and Genevieve's own inspired version of this famous seafood soup-stew. As one enters La Marmite there is a framed copy of "The Great Sea Soup of Southern France" modestly on the wall.

Now to the beach.

A wood or charcoal fire burns down to glowing coals on whatever chosen beach. Two or more cast iron pots simmer with the following succulent combinations. Nowhere is this fish soup quite the same, even along the south coast of France.

CLYDE'S CARMEL BOUILLABAISSE

First a tomato saffron-scented base is made with 2 cans, (each 1 lb. 12 oz.) peeled tomatoes; 1 empty tomato can full of water; 1 t., each, salt and powdered thyme; 2 small bay leaves; ½ t. white pepper. Simmer, covered, for 20 min. Discard bay leaves and press mixture through fine sieve and reserve broth.

Now to the fish: 3 red snapper and or salmon steaks, skinned and boned; 1 lb. rockfish fillets; 2 lbs. large shrimp, 2 doz. small hardshell clams; 1 lb. small scallops; 3 frozen lobster tails, thawed; powdered saffron to taste.

In tomato broth add saffron, lobster, clams and scallops, shelled and deveined shrimp, carefully washed in sea water minus sand. Next comes whatever fish, cut up, you have. Gently simmer until shrimp and lobster turn a pale pink and fish is tender but firm. Bring along deep pottery soup bowls. Fill with evenly distributed seafood-fish and fragrant broth.

Freshly baked French bread with generous amounts of delicate sweet butter and a choice of French or California wines (where permitted) makes this an unsurpassed Carmel outing. We usually have a hamper of "crudites"...tiny pickles, olives, cucumbers, zucchine, cauliflower, raw mushrooms, artichoke hearts, asparagus spears, radishes, celery, with standbys of seasoned salt, plus chips and dips, to stave off starvation. We became rather bored with stuffing eggs, so we not just bring them (already cooked) in their shells.

Perhaps cookies. Many thermoses of boiling water, powdered coffee. And such necessities as cups, forks, spoons. Sugar and the rest.

We always dunk our bites of French bread into the bouillabaisse!

"On a Clear Day"

A short 55 mile drive takes you into the most beautiful redwoods with a view from several locations of Pt. Lobos. Only the ingenuity of a knowledgeable man who has cleared brush, Madrones, dead trees, etc. could make this the Paradise it is. There is plenty of water for each parcel, as well as electricity. He is offering the last 8 acres that can be divided by a new owner. It is a money-maker for someone. It is above the fog overlooking the town of Felton. No noise except a whistle from the little narrow gauge train below that is a tourist's delight. The greatest place in the world to get away from everything. Realistically priced at $45,000.

"It's What's Up Front That Counts!"

Especially if it's the Pacific Ocean

RIGHT ON THE WATER'S EDGE

Not one, but three possibilities for your selection: CASA DEL PUENTE a wonderful Mediterranean which could be on any famous seacoast of the world, but is fortunately only 4 miles South of Carmel. Each lovely room has its own architectural interest and its own special orientation to the sea; guest house and even a swimming pool. $350,000 and worth it!

Another kind of charm and a real study in perfection of dreaming, planning and execution is SHIP ROCK on its fascinating cove looking at Pt. Lobos. Every modern convenience is combined with an elegance in style seldom, if ever, seen in an almost new home. $297,500.

Probably one of the most exciting, and certainly one of the most unusual homes every built here, on the beach just a mile from Carmel with permanently protected views, completely different from the traditional homes above -- these are among the many fascinations of a very special house for a very swinging buyer, priced well under replacement at $185,000.

OVERLOOKING THE OCEAN

In the Carmel Highlands, where the redwoods and oaks and bay trees are almost as fascinating as the ocean views, and where seclusion is a decided factor, our wide variety offers everything from a most sophisticated A-Frame at $98,500 to an English Country Estate at $125,000 -- with a completely furnished and utterly intriguing redwood retreat in between at $79,500. Let us show you the possibilities.

IN CARMEL

We can give you a Spanish style two story house with delightful patios, walled gardens, and a guest apartment, right on Scenic Drive, for $89,500. Or high above the village and looking at the whole scene, a 4-bedroom 6-year-old home we have just listed at $79,500.

SEE THE SEA ACROSS THE SHORE COURSE

Simply magnificent acean views from an old Spanish for a large family or a shared weekender. Three master suites or 6 bedrooms, 5½ baths apartment. On the 13th Tee of the Shore Course, and only $125,000.

OR BUILD TO SUIT

We have a variety of ocean view lots in the estates area of Pebble Beach, in Carmel, down the Coast, and in Jack's Peak. Perhaps one of our best is across the boulevard from the incredibly beautiful succulent gardens along the water's edge near Lover's Point in Pacific Grove, where you can acquire a city-kept garden in your front yard, as well as the sea itself, for just $29,500.
